Using art to convey a message, without understanding the form, structure, materials, techniques and history of the medium, is rather like setting out on a rescue mission on a foggy ocean in an unseaworthy lifeboat with no navigational skills

Brand and Chaplin

A work of art does not normally make a direct or literal statement. If you try to reduce it to such, you will destroy all its power. It communicates symbolically, allusively.

Kitsch is the absolute denail of shit

Milan Kundera

But if we begin simply with an attempt to communicate a worldview it will miscarry: it will be merely propaganda. We need not worry that we are failing to put our worldview across – it is inescapable as the accent, tone and word-formation with which we speak.

Brand and Chaplin

You can't bludgeon people with Christian art into accepting Jesus Christ
